This is a rare museum worthy piece, prized not only because of its rarity and highly desirable aesthetic decoration, which was very popular in England and America in the late nineteenth century, when Asian art started to become fashionable again and rediscovered after an absence of 100 years, but because of the excellence of engraving and pattern of partial gilding, which was referred to as parcel gilding. The word parcel is an error of misunderstanding the word partial by the silversmiths, who, although highly skilled and talented, were unable to read. The word parcel thus entered the English language as term used for this type of incomplete highlighting of silver by gold. The firm of Elkington (for whom Aldwinkle worked) were the main silversmiths of this type of object in England, and Tiffany and Gorham were the main manufacturers in the USA. These Victorian objects were hand made in a time consuming way, and thus distinguished from most silver objects made in the nineteenth century by machine. For this reason, they are highly prized by collectors today. The engraving cannot be restored so that a group such as this are particularly exceptional to find in such perfect order.

241	A mid Victorian silver fully hallmarked English sterling silver Cellini pattern ewer, of exceptional gauge and beautifully cast decoration	260	Bone carved 'Musician Lady' figurine
	This is a collector's piece and made in the rare Cellini style, popular in the England and modelled on the work of the famous sixteenth century sculptor Benvenuto Cellini, considered the greatest artist and sculptor and silversmith of all time. In the nineteenth century, educated young upper class English gentry took the grand tour, an extended period of travel, often up to a year, mostly visiting the classical sites in Italy as part of their further education and life experience after university study. On their return, they usually embarked on a career of collecting fine objects, influenced by their experiences in Europe, including paintings, ancient figures, silver and micromosaics. This form of ewer is based on the neoclassical Roman styles, and is of particularly good thick gauge and exemplary quality reflecting the clientele who bought the objects and as, in this typical example, feature well executed casting of masks and figures on a profusely decorative classical background, in Italianate style of the 16th century, as a memento of the time spent on the grand tour.	261	Japanese 'Long Life' bone carved figurine
